Dear [REDACTED]

Since my arrival in Alicante on the 15th of April 2012 I have only had access to mum on my very first day as [REDACTED] did not know I was coming. Yet, I had warned mum of my arrival a couple of days beforehand but at her delicate age of 88 I think she must have forgotten that I was coming to visit. Isabelle in a move to keep me out of the house called the police and made false declarations. Whilst I was being interrogated by the Guardia Civil I did notice that it said on an A4 paper stuck to the wall that all false declarations would be punished by the penal code 456. I will stay in Alicante the time it takes to clear up the business with the Guardia Civil as well as looking after some other very urgent matters. As both of you are working together to stop me from seeing mum I would like to ask both of you to stop acting in this way. As you know mum loves me dearly and is always extremely happy to see me. So each time that [REDACTED] breaks into a tantrum over my arrival or yells at mum to order her to not speak to me, I am deeply troubled to see the sadness and pain in mum's eyes. Mum wants to live a peaceful life and see us get on. I think that we can all agree that mum has been an excellent mother and therefore deserves a five star treatment from our part.

Once more I urge both of you to reconsider your feelings towards me in order to allow us to sit down and talk over our differences.
