

Sent: 15 April 2012 23:13

To: [REDACTED]

Subject: Still trying to put things right

[REDACTED]

Over the last two years I have on numerous occasions tried to renew a dialogue with both of you. Each time I was pushed away as if I had committed an unforgivable crime. I understand today that both you had been scheming behind my back and so it was better to keep me at an arms length in order to not risk having a change of heart. Could you at least have the decency to tell me what I have done that has created this situation. I still have brotherly love for both of you so I have difficulty in believing that it is not reciprocal. I think that we can still put things right before things get completely out of hand. We just have to sit down together and talk like normal human beings. Even if both of you again do not react I will not give up on trying to convince you that problems in our world can only be solved through dialogue.

Cheers,

[REDACTED]